How to confirm my identity on facebook without phone number

By Shawn Farnar Facebook is a social networking service that helps you keep in contact with friends and family. Facebook members can share a lot of information about themselves on their Facebook profiles. It might be something as general as what kind of music they like, or even something more specific, like their phone number. If you want to see which Facebook friends have added phone numbers to their profiles, you can do so in just a few steps. Browse to the Facebook homepage at Facebook.com and log in. Click "Account" near the top of the screen on the right side, then click "Edit Friends." Click "Contacts" on the left side of the screen. This displays all of your Facebook friends that have phone numbers included in their profiles. As of this writing, there is no way to search for the phone numbers of users with whom you aren't friends. Photo: Justin Sullivan (Getty Images)Facebook's done it again!What is it this time, you ask? Well, Facebook may have your phone number and they're allowing anyone in the world to find your account! Quick, change your settings now! I'm a tremendous fan of using "dark mode" or "night mode" on my phone whenever possible. Beyond...Read moreBut why did this happen? And, more importantly, how did they ever get your information? Here are all the answers to your questions (and why a solution to your security anxiety isn't an easy one).How did they get my phone number?Ever secure your Facebook account using two-factor authentication? It's pretty simple. Facebook allows you to "link" your phone, so you can receive a text to verify your account whenever you log in. Turns out that even if you hide your phone number on your profile, anyone can still search for you using this information.Writer Jeremy Burge first brought up the issue on Twitter, which has sparked a firestorm of similar complaints from users. "I can no longer keep private the phone number that I provided only for security to Facebook," security expert and writer, Zeynep Tufekci, wrote on Twitter. "Zero notification of this major, risky change."The default setting on Facebook is set so that any user can find you using your phone number, so you're likely already at risk. And you can't fully opt out since the best privacy setting you can select is still open to friends.Well, it's not like Facebook is going to use my phone number for evil purposes, right?Wrong! As Gizmodo noted, last year, Facebook used your phone number from two-factor authentication to start annoying you with targeted ads (despite being used for "security purposes." There's nothing stopping them from using your number for other reasons, like having total strangers find you without your consent. Why, Facebook, why?What can I do about it?We'll be honest—not a whole lot. Facebook can still find your phone number without you even providing it (yep). How? According to Burge, Facebook shares its information with everybody, including Instagram and WhatsApp (they own both). If any friend logs in using those accounts and accepts access to their contacts, it's entirely possible they can still locate you. As Burge also noted in a screenshot, he never provided his number to Instagram, yet was asked to confirm it just days after providing it to Facebook via two-way authentication.But here's what you can do if you want to protect yourself as much as you can: Under "Settings," find "Privacy," and you'll find information on how people can find and contact you. Under "Who can look you up using the phone number you provided," select "Friends." You can also set up two-factor authentication with an email address (we'd recommend a burner), over a phone number.Unless you've never had a Facebook account and given a phone number to a friend, you're likely still vulnerable (bleak, we know), but at the very least, this will, maybe, stop old high-school acquaintances from calling you.
